Auditorium Boekings for June 13, 14, 15

The Auditorium offers as a headliner for next week one of the quaintest, eddest and at the same time one of the most delightful acts on the circuit. Queen Mab and Oscar Welss are the features. Queen Mab is the smallest lady actress in the world, and her partner, Oscar Welss, the famous miniature comedian, is not any larger than she is. They are not children, but grown up people, whose combined height does not reach six feet. These dainty little people sing and dance in a comedy sketch that is a scream. Don't miss bringing yourself and the children to see the smallest people in the world. James F. Murphy, known as the international siyphone king, will render his difficult and intricate selections on that instrument. An act that will amuse is the Longweed Sisters, who in their line of eccentric singing, talking and dancing will introduce some new ideas. That Komikal Kuss, Joe Burke, is one of the funniest single turns on the stage today. To see Burke is to laugh? Auditorium enterprise has again come to the front in securing for its patrons the only original moving pictures of King Edward VII's funeral, taken in London not two weeks ago. Going some! These pletures will be shown Monday and Tuesday. These are the only original pictures. Don't be misled by others. See them and be convinced. Auditorium Bookings for June 13, 14, 15

BREED THEATER.

Cewboy and Indian Feature Piotures.

There is an especially strong bill at the Breed theater for today, and all attending will be assured of a great treat. Foremost on the programme is the great story of the Indian massacre at Wyoming, Pa, in the year 1777, and included in its many scenes are to be noted the attack on the settlement and the inoiting of the Indians to massacre, the capture of Forty Fort and the remarkable escape of the captured colonists. This picture is thoroughly Indian and the action takes place in a picturesque region, while the scenes in the blockhouse are exciting in the extreme and the climax fills the spectators with the wildest delight.

The Cowboy's Sweetheart is the really truly wastern story and tells of the cowboy's misplaced love and its almost serious consequences, while the Blograph story of the love of two Frenchmen for an unknown woman, which finds a responsive chord in the hearts of all his hearers.

"Considerate" Mr. Ballinger

A Washington correspondent writes:
"Secretary Ballinger naturally appreciates the way in which President Tatt has stood behind him. His loyalty to his chief is such that he willingly would sacrifice himself to relieve the president of the slightest embarance."

een both loyal and considerate.

The events leading up to the demand for an inquiry into the siministration of the office of the secretary of the interior shows that Mr. Ballinger was Interior shows that Mr. Bailinger was thinking largely along two lines: How he might best please the school of development we which he had been identified in the west, how he might heap embarrassments upon his immediate predecessor and get his appointees out of the way. After the investigation began Mr. Bailinger devoted his energies to devising schemes by which he could take shelter behind the president's good-nature, and when he which he could take shelter behind the president's good-nature, and when he was caught in equivocation, to transfer the burden to Mr. Taft's shoulders. These may not be facts. They were to be inferred from the news and the testimony and the Ballinger manner on the witness stand. If the correspondent is right, then the secretary has been maligned and exceedingly misunderstood. For the credit of the public service we would like to think so. But, in the instance, it is easier to believe that the correspondent was testing the stretching powers of general foolishness.—Toledo Blade.

THE VACUUM.

Oh. Europe will be lonely,
And politics be dull,
In transmarine excitement,
Will come a large-sized lull,
A sense of empty longing
From Egypt unto Rome,
Will spread, and thence to London,
For Roosevelt's coming home.

The swarthy Oriental,
Phlegmatic German, Dutch.
The volatile Italian,
Who lionized him much.
The stolid, burly Briton,
Whose heavy mental doma.
He hath perturbed, will miss him,
For Roossvelt's coming home.

That staid Old World which ages
Has moved its stately way.
Rock-ribbed in its traditions
Is dumb and dazed today;
For ne'er such strenuous isotures
In speeches or in tome,
Will it again e'er hearken,
Now Roosevelt's coming home.

"We have absolutely nobody else to run," says the worriest of the age. "We have absolutely nobody else to run," says the worriest of the age. "We have absolutely nobody else to run," says the worriest of the age. "We have absolutely nobody else to run," says the worriest democratis, and that means that the hope of running the whole country by a democratic majority in the mational house may be dushed like other democratic dreams of the past. The party that cannot find a man to take care of that one district must be a wonder at taking the entire United States under its management for a series of years.
